Chinese Laborers.

The Louisiana Sugar Bowl of a recent date contains a communication from a planter at Irish Bend, Parish of St. Mary, who during the last eight months has had twenty-six Chinamen at work for him on his sugar plantation ; he infinitely and for every leason prefers them to negroes. In November and December last they planted forty arpents of cane for him, and although at first they were awkward workmen yet in a wonderfully short time they improved so greatly as who, with three exceptions, became disgusted and ran away at the end of the year. As ploughmen the Chinese are and all is right. This planter pays them $13 for twenty-six days work, retaining $3 until the end of the contract; their rations, fifteen pounds of pork and fifty pounds of rice for thirty days. The laborers are orderly, cheerful, and cleanly; all of the twenty-five in two houses, twenty feet wide by forty long, and all their cooking and eating is done in an adjoiring house. Life and Time.

Life is so cheap and yet so dear We prize it, but we scorn it too, And plod our round from year to year With little or to hope or do : Each day brings fretful cares and coil, And sorrows come and joys depart, And we grow old with weary toil, Or else from listlessness of heart .-What matters which? what matters Time heedeth not our fitful moods, But stamps its signet on our brow
In city life or solitudes;
And we grow old; yet scarcely feel
The incessant whirling of the wheel,
Nor heed the traces that declare We are not now what once we were The world has worn us to its ways :

"Do this," it says, and we obey; There is no freedom in our praise We gasp and cry for youth again, And wonder where the joy has gone Which we were wont to feed upon; When Love with Life walked hand in hand, When 'twas a boundless bliss to dare The mighty peaks that guard the land Where wisdom dwells serenely fair,-Dear Heaven! how strong and rich we were, For joy breeds strength, and hope gives power And knowledge is the young man's dower, And youthful dreams are fair domains,

And happy thoughts are golden gains. The dreams are gone, the rapture past, Each year moves calmly like the last, The sea that foamed with deafning roar Creeps laggard-like along the shore,— We tread the footsteps of our fres With petty aims and mean desires, And idly act our little part
Like puppets fashioned for a show;

Teach us, O Lord! how great Thou art,
That we our greatness, too, may know.

THE MATCHLIGHTER OF ADRIAN.

The sun had not yet attained its meridian height above the bare and rugged mountains of Zacatecas, when a man in the garb of a Mexican miner descended slowly down a narrow and tortuous path which wound along the side of a steep declivity.

Presently a wide covered basket became visible in this direction, with a small band grasping it on one side. Then a pretty face, with a pair of sparkling black eyes, and two small ruddy lips, parted in a smile of pleasure and surprise, came into view. Then followed the erect and shapely figure to which the pretty face belonged, gayly attired, as became a miner's wife. " Enhorahuena-in good time, Margarita," said the miner, showing his white "I am liere before you." "Yes, in good truth," replied the young woman, laughing; "and I was afraid all the time that I might be too early, and the tortillas and frijoles would get cold. But now they will be a dinner fit for a gov-

"How is it that you are so early to-day, Manuelito ?" asked the female, who watched him with an affectionate smile, while he was thus satisfactorily engaged.

"Because, my little heart," replied the young man, "there is to be another blast to-day; and the administrador wishes to have it fired while the men are at dinner.' The smile instantly disappeared from
